The printer boy, who, in 1814, set up in the Baltimore American the MS. of Francis Scott Key's poem, "The Star-Spangled Banner," still lives in full vigor, being none other than Samuel Sands, the editor of the American Farmer. The American received the MS. from John S. Skinner, who, after the bombardment of Fort McHenry and the withdrawal of the British fleet, was sent down to them in a flag-of-truce boat to negotiate for an exchange of prisoners. Mr. Skinner chanced to meet Mr. Key on the boat and obtained from him a copy of his song. It was not for some time after its publication that the modest Key would permit it to be known that he was the author. Mr. Sands has long been known as the editor of the Farmer, but the fact of his having "set up" "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be new to many.
